The favorable reception accorded Illustrations of China and Its People by John Thomson possessed an acute sense of his projected audience and its desire to know more of China and the customs of its people. He honed these instincts operating a commercial photography studio that served Hong Kong's growing population of foreign residents and tourists. As with most commercial photographers of the late 19th century, Thomson worked in a wide variety of genres ranging from cartes de visite to large-scale government commissions. He was the official photographer for the 1869 visit to Hong Kong. Illustrations of China and Its People is a collection of photographs from this commission.
